Description of the event and its Significance/Scope in 100-300 words	Impact of demonetization on the economy of India Demonetization in the economic sense is an act of removing a currency unit of its previous status as legal tender.In other words we can define it whenever there is change of national currency,old currency is out of market and in their place new currency comes into existence. It is the preview of the government to change the currency of any denomination and introduce new currency in his place. In November 8,2016 the present government has decided to demonetise the 500 and 1000 rupee notes. These notes accounted for 86 percent of the countries cash supply. Government put several reasons of the present demonetisation, like to eradicate counterfeit currency,to fight tax evasion,to check black money and money laundering and terrorist financing activities.The government has also emphasised on the promotion of cashless economy. There are many instances of Demonetization occurred in India and in many other countries of the world.In India first Demonetization tookplace in 1946 and 1978 nations of the European Monetary Union adopted Euro in 2002.When euro was introduced, in old national currencies were demonetised. Demonetisation has opposite and inverse relation with supply of money when demonetisation comes in effect supply of money or quantity of money is drastically reduced. People demand money mainly for three purposes Transaction,Precautionary and Speculative motives.Due to demonetisation effective demand for money is reduced.
